Tips for Bird Watching Beginners

Equipment

Bring binoculars or a spotting scope.

Be quiet

Birds are easily startled by loud noises and will flee to cover.

Avoid sudden movements

Just as loud noises startle birds, so does sudden movement.

Study habitat

Download an app or bring a field guide. Each bird is specially adapted to a particular habitat.

Be sure to have the sun at your back.

Avoid brightly colored clothes.

Wear darker colors or earth tones to blend into the background.

Be patient!

Yellow-billed cuckoo

Millions of Americans consider bird watching one of their favorite hobbies. Any time of year is a great time to get out and see birds, but spring migration time is when flocks of colorful birds are moving along their migratory flyways toward their breeding grounds and can be seen more easily than during nesting season.

Whether you already enjoy watching birds or are interested in becoming a bird watcher, you are invited to this special-access birding event at Hidden Hollow Camp! This park site is not typically open to the public, and reservations are required to use the area and its facilities. However, for one week during peak migratory songbird migration, visitors will have access to this special area for bird watching.

Park naturalists will kick off the week with a special all-things-avian event, complete with educational displays, interesting biofacts, and experienced birders who can help you locate some of the harder to find feathered friends.
